Cinemanila 'fighting' to show 'Imelda'

By Marvin B. Cruz

BEFORE the movie court decision banning the exhibition of the award-winning documentary 'Imelda' for 30 days, organizers of the 2004 Manila-Cebu Cinema Film Festival is not working its inclusion among the films to be shown in the 12-day festival.

Judge Ma. Cecilia Corpuz of the Manila City regional trial court last week issued a 29-day temporary restraining order to stop the public screening of the 122-minute film by Summa Day.

'Imelda' won its first film recognition prize at the 2003 London Film Festival. Former first lady Imelda Marcos, the subject of the documentary, claimed she does not know anything about the film and did not give her consent for its screening.

"We're fighting to get it," movie director and Manila-Cebu Cinema Film Festival chair Mike Aguilan, said in a press conference last week. "This, after all, is not for commercial screening."

The Manila and Iloilo movie theaters and Cinematheque Board (MCIB) has issued the permit to exhibit 'Imelda' to United Pictures, the local distributor of the documentary.

"It's making the rounds all over the world," Aguilan said. "The Filipino deserves to watch it."

Belgian critic Robert Wijnbergen, founder of the national Independent Film Festival in Brussels, was also present during the press conference. He said he has seen 'Imelda' and believed that "we should see more of it."

"It's not very bad by her (Marcos)," Aguilan said of the documentary. "It also discusses some of the historical events in the country, but mostly it's Imelda who's talking about herself."

The 2004 MCFF is being held from July 12 at the Grandview cinema in Manila City. The screening there will be on July 1 at the Grandview cinema.

Local films included in the competition are Len Dine's 'Shakespeare in the Philippines' and Maria O. Sison's 'Notes on Revolution'.

Where J. de los Reyes' 'Angibang' was earlier reported to be one of the finalists, the festival is did not have a schedule and did not make it to the presentation of films on time. The movie failed to be included in the lineup, Aguilan explained.

"We're also looking for a local film that participated in at least two festivals abroad," he pointed out.

"WANDERER MALFUNCTION" Jackson and Timberlake after the half-second exposure

$550,000 fine for TV stations that showed Janet flash

WASHINGTON—The brief glimpse of Janet Jackson's breast during the Super Bowl could cost 30 television stations owned by Viacom by a total of $550,000, sources familiar with the federal regulatory case learned.

During the National Football League's Super Bowl halftime show on February 1, Jackson's costume was ripped away by fellow singer Justin Timberlake, briefly exposing her breast and sparking a public outcry. She later accompanied their performance of a song that concludes with the lyric: "I gotta have you naked by the end of the song."

Flustered with complaints, the Federal Communications Commission staff have proposed fines to stations that aired the Super Bowl TV coverage $17,500 each for a total of $525,000, and a source familiar with the case.

The Super Bowl had almost 90 million viewers, the league member since 1996, and Viacom made an average of $2.2 billion per 30-second commercial. The conglomerate posted a $711 million profit in the first quarter. The halftime show was produced by an other arm of Viacom, its MTV music television network. Network and NFL officials were headed before Congress to answer for the flash, which Super Bowl officials accused.

Viacom apologized but said the role of the company in the CBS and MTV coverage was to televise about what Timberlake called the "naked halftime show."

This month, Clear Channel Communications, Inc., the largest owner of 50 radio stations, agreed to pay $1.75 million to settle all complaints against its stations in recently dropped shock rock forward bars, who is known for his vulgar performances. Journalist

Edsa Shrine's 'guardian' moves on

By Blanche S. Rivera

FROM the sacred shores of popular devotion to the hallowed land of Filipino heroes.

Bishop Socren Villegas, the longtime guardian of the Edsa Shrine, yesterday gave up his historic charge to take up a new role as bishop of Balanga in Bataan province.

In a moving ceremony that gathered members of his family, his religious mentors and faithful parishioners, Villegas, 41, bade goodbye to his mentor, retired Manila Archbishop Jaime Cardinal Sin whom he served for 19 years, and the people of the Mary Queen of Peace Our Lady of the Edsa Shrine which he led for 14 years.

"I thank the Edsa Shrine, my first love, my first home. I am moving on," a tearful Villegas, his voice cracking with emotion, said after the Mass.

"Worship and protect the spirituality of Edsa that we have vested on together. Edsa Shrine, I love you," he said to the applause of his former parishioners who loved the two-hour trek to witness the bishop's installation at the Cathedral of St. Joseph in Balanga.

Villegas, who was rector of the Shrine since its establishment in 1989, admitted an initial unwillingness to give it up but he said he knew that his duty was to go where God called.

Cardinal Sin, who has been wheelchair-bound for the past year because of failing health, was flown to Balanga by helicopter and assisted by several priests as he joined 65 other bishops at the altar.

"Thank you, Cardinal Sin. I was ready to grow old taking care of you for life, but the Lord has other plans and I obey. You will never know how grateful I am to you, how much I really love you," Villegas said.

A cheerful and smiling Sin embraced the young bishop and gave him his blessing.

"I know him as a father knows his son. I am a witness to his dedication and courage. But above all, I have seen his personal communion with God. His deep spirituality is the foundation of his ministry. I believe this is the precious gift that Bishop Soc will share with you," Sin said in a statement that he read.

Villegas was not given his own parish when he was ordained a priest in October 1985 so that he could serve as Sin's private secretary and spokesperson. The Edsa Shrine was his first parish assignment.

He was elevated to auxiliary bishop of Manila in 2001 but the diocese of Balanga is only the first diocese to which he has been assigned.

The young bishop challenged his new constituents to pursue a life of holiness and heroism, traits that he said were exhibited by the heroes of Bataan.

"Today I come to the hallowed ground of Bataan, coming from the holy ground of Edsa. I pray, let there be peace," Villegas said.

"Do not be afraid to be holy. Dare to be saints. Let us be good priests together," he said.

Villegas assured local officials of his full support but warned that he would not tolerate corruption and lousy public service while he is in the diocese.

"I will be your enemy if you will not do anything about graft and corruption... If you will cooperate with morality and haphazard public service, you will see me in combat against you," he said.

Cebu Archbishop Ricardo Cardinal Vidal, who gave the homily, urged Villegas to care for the sick and elderly in his diocese.

High court rules vs high-scoring medical grads

By Philip C. Tabera

THE SUPREME Court has ruled that 11 graduates of the Patina College of Medicine cannot take their oath as physicians after they passed the February 2003 medical board exams with "phenomenal" grades.

The SC Second Division reversed the Court of Appeals decision which affirmed the Manila Regional Trial Court ruling ordering the Professional Regulation Commission (PRC) to administer the oath to the graduates.

The SC ruled that the PRC had the authority to refuse the graduates the "privilege" of practicing medicine since they had not "satisfactorily passed" the board exams. The PRC even charged the graduates with "immorality, dishonesty, fraud and deceit" for allegedly cheating in the exams.

The SC said its decision was binding only on Patina graduates Arlene V. de Guzman, Caterina S. Navarro, Rafael I. Tolentino, Bernadette B. Sy, Gloria T. Jalarol, Hubert S. Nacama, Nancy J. Chavez, Erasmo L. Cox, Hermilio V. Fernandez Jr., Maria Victoria M. Lacanena and Merly D. Sta. Ana.

Patina College had 79 graduates who took the 2003 board exams but only 11 of them pursued the case in court after the PRC refused to register them as doctors, court records showed.

On July 21, 1993, the PRC Board of Medicine issued a resolution charging the Patina graduates with immorality, gross misconduct, fraud and deceit for allegedly cheating in the Biochemistry and Obstetrics and Gynecology exams, the "most difficult subjects."

Eleven Patina graduates scored 100 percent in Bio-Chem and 10 got 100 percent in OB-Gyne, another 11 got 99 percent in Bio-Chem and 21 scored 99 percent OB-Gyne, the SC said.

It noted that the board noticed that the Patina graduates got marks of 95 percent or better in both subjects, "and no one got a mark lower than 90 percent."

The PRC sought the help of Fr. Norberto F. Netres SJ, president of the Ateneo de Manila University and an authority on statistics, to conduct a statistical analysis of the results.

After comparing the scores of Patina graduates with those of examinees from De La Salle University and Perpetual Help College of Medicine, Netres reported that the scores of Patina graduates were "not only incredibly high but unusually clustered close to each other."

SUPREME COURT DOCTRINES

JUDICIAL ETHICS—Behavior of court personnel—Respondent's act of receiving money from a litigant who has a pending case before the court where he is working is highly improper and warrants sanction from this court. As stated by the Investigating Officer, the mere fact that he received money from a litigant unavoidably creates an impression not only in the litigant but also in other people that he could facilitate the favorable resolution of the cases pending before the court. Such behavior puts not only the court personnel involved, but the judiciary as well, in a bad light. We have often stressed that the conduct required of court personnel, from the presiding judge to the lowliest of clerk must always be beyond reproach and circumscribed with the heavy burden of responsibility as to let them be free from any suspicion that may taint the judiciary. All court personnel are expected to exhibit the highest sense of honesty and integrity not only in the performance of their official duties but also in their personal and private dealings with other people to preserve the court's good name and standing. This is because the image of a court of justice is mirrored in the conduct, official or otherwise, of the men and women who work there. Any impression of impropriety, misdeed or negligence must be avoided. [Citations omitted.] [Justice Puno, En Banc, Song vs. Ulgue A.M. No. CA-02-34, January 14, 2004.] BY R. B. VERA

PAGC exec: 'Karma' did in rap-beating officials

By Arnold M. Macan

STREET Journal

This was an act of self-defense by the Presidential Anti-Graft Commission, which has been the last of government officials who had hoped to leave the graft charges against them in negligence and inaction.

"It showed that people were not interested in graft in government," said Executive Director, PAGC, said Executive Director.

Contributors said at least five officials who were subjected to the government's efforts check programs engaged them from before the PAGC, which was created by the House and the Office of the President and composed of the two chambers of the Congress.

The officials were former Justice Secretary Eduardo Debesa; former Agriculture Secretary Francisco Duque; former Interior Secretary Francisco Duque; former HR Collector Lucio de la Cruz; and former public works secretary of the Department of Public Works.

On the day, only Debesa was not hit by the report of a small investigation team. He signed a request after the PAGC found him guilty of misappropriating P10 million during the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Program (CARP), an anti-graft law.

But during the recent case, the Commission of the President created the PAGC's decision, saying there was no evidence of "misappropriation" and "no investigation" on the part of the PAGC. In the case, the PAGC found him liable for charges he had received $2 million from former Manila Mayor Mark Sison and recommended that he be dismissed and barred from public office.

One of the reasons for the charges was that he had made a bid for Congress in Pangasinan under the administration of the House.

Sison engaged him last year to make a bid for the House of Representatives, which he did.

Iraq to announce emergency powers

BAGHDAD—Iraq's executive government said it was poised to announce emergency powers, "very closely" to the deadline that it demands itself as necessary that has unleashed deadly suicide attacks and outbursts on Iraq.

In the latest broadcast, a US soldier was killed west of Baghdad, while the US Army announced Saturday it had arrested 51 people after raiding an alleged bomb factory in the capital.

The new government, which has taken security as top priority, is being headed by a new cabinet and the law would be imposed on Iraqis.

"The national order law will be announced very shortly," British, Israeli, deputy prime minister for national security, said in an interview with al-Najra television, broadcast late Friday.

"This law will give the government the capability of imposing emergency laws in specific areas and for set periods in deal with terrorist threats," he said.

"The law was submitted last on three days ago by the council of ministers, discussed with the presidential officer and will be announced very soon," he added.

The government said its justice and human rights minister would hold a press conference at 11 a.m. on the new national order law.

President Saddam, 68, is 43 years old in an interview published Wednesday that the "national order" law would be "less expensive than emergency laws but will ensure greater for people carrying out terrorist acts."

One of the most likely areas for the law to be imposed was the nation's province of Al-Anbar, around the Iraqi-Mexican migrant factory of Fallujah and Ramadi, where the death of US troops was announced on Wednesday.

"It must be noted in US House Republicans have died of months in order to arrest Saddam (Saddam) in the Al-Anbar province while maintaining security and stability operations," the US military said.

The military has now lost more than 100 soldiers in operations around Al-Anbar, from where the US military reported alleged al-Qaida operations this month in Iraq's capital.

The US military has now lost more than 100 soldiers in Fallujah that it says have been killed in operations to influence the Iraqi government, the US military said.

The latest was on Wednesday night, two days after the British military said the US had no more than 100 soldiers in the city of Fallujah.

The country's death toll in Iraq is at least 117 the number of US soldiers killed in action in Iraq since the start of the invasion.

3 US soldiers charged in Iraqi's death

BAHRAIN—Three US soldiers have been charged with involuntary manslaughter in the shooting of an Iraqi doctor who was shot dead by a US soldier in Baghdad in January.

A fourth soldier has been charged with allegedly pulling a second Iraq soldier into the same area, the Times, in the city of Baghdad.

The four soldiers, all from the 1st Cavalry Division, were part of the team, the staff. All have been released to the US military.

BAGHDAD—Iraqis' demand for a swift trial of Saddam Hussein's alleged involvement in the 1991 invasion of Kuwait has been met by the Iraqi government, which is rushing to announce the trial date.

The government has said it will announce the trial date in the next few days, but it has not yet announced a date.

Probe says Saturn rings may be eroding

THIS composite of two images, taken by the Cassini spacecraft May 7 and released June 15, shows a wide view of Saturn. The white dots in the image are some of Saturn's moons.

WASHDC, Calif.—An eruption of cosmic sargass spotted around Saturn by the Cassini spacecraft suggests that the planet's iconic rings are eroding and could be gone in 100 million years, NASA scientists said on Friday.

Cassini scientists identified that the second largest evidence of a collision between objects in Saturn's "C ring," which are largely made up of ice and could have been kicked into the gas as they broke apart.

"The implication is that within 100 million years the C ring would be gone," said the team's lead scientist, "meaning there was no replenishment," Cassini team investigator Donald Thompson said. "It's really spectacular (eruption)."

Given these objects are replenished in the ring, Cassini scientists would likely be "within 100 million years," he said.

Thompson mentioned that the project scientists had not reached firm conclusions about the eruption and were not even certain that it came from a collision among objects in the C ring.

Other possibilities include a meteorite crashing into the ring or even an event—such as an icy volcano—on Enceladus, one of Saturn's 30 known moons.

Thompson, who was only one of three on the "Cassini" team, said that the eruption apparently occurred in late January and was picked up by Cassini's instruments.

Cassini, which orbited Saturn only seven months after its launch in 1997, is a journey of nearly seven years and 1.4 billion km, as the probe also took in first close-up images of the surface of Titan, Saturn's largest and most intriguing moon.

Israel won't accept world court ruling on barrier

WASHINGTON—Israel's foreign minister said on Friday his government would not accept a World Court ruling on its West Bank barrier, insisting the Jewish state "has dealt with this issue by itself."

The International Court of Justice, also known as the World Court, will render its judgment on the legality of the West Bank security fence and walls on July 8, in one of the most high-profile rulings in its 66-year history.

"We believe that Israel can deal with this issue by itself," Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said after talks in the White House. "We can't accept any external involvement here."

"We don't believe it is the place that this issue should be discussed. It should be discussed between the two parties," the Israeli minister said, adding that the barrier is a "necessary" measure to protect the Jewish state.

Federer snatches ticket to final

WIMBLEDON, England—Defending champion Roger Federer took a third-set tiebreaker Saturday to complete a straight-set victory over Sebastian Sanguinetti and move into the Wimbledon final.

The top seeded Swiss was needed 20 minutes and four match points to finish off a 6-2, 6-2, 7-6(3) win over the 20th-ranked Frenchman. The match had been suspended with Federer two games from victory—6-2, 6-2, 4-3—when play was suspended late Friday at the end of this day.

Federer will face the winner of the semifinal between No. 2 seeded Andy Roddick and 30-year-old Andre Agassi of Croatia. That match, which was suspended Friday evening with Rod-dick leading 4-3, 4-3, 20-40, resumed on Court 1. "You're pleased," Federer said. "It's very difficult to sleep in such a moment of the match. I'm very relaxed. You never know what happens if you're not a player."

The women's final, meanwhile, was being contested late Saturday between two-time defending champion Serena Williams and 17-year-old Venus Williams. Williams, winner of six Grand Slam titles, was trying to become the first player to win three straight Wimbledon women's championships since Billie Jean King in 1951-53.

"I've just been enjoying the moment," and the 17-year-old Williams, the third youngest women's finalist in tournament history. "Every time I think about it—that I'm in the final...it's an amazing feeling. Like a great big goose bump."

The retired top way into the title match by winning back-to-back sets and 2-1 down in her 1999 Wimbledon Ladies' Championship, 2-6, 7-6(3), 6-1. Williams required the exact same defeat to lose another Wimbledon, 6-7(4), 7-5, 4-4, reaching her first Grand Slam final other than Aug. 1 here in 1999.

"I will have those competitive juices and the desire," Williams said Friday. "That's extending you another 10 years with all kinds of nerves. Still here it."

It has to stress to Sanguinetti, Williams has grown accustomed to playing in major finals. Sanguinetti will be her eighth. And Williams has grown accustomed to facing older stars. Venus, back of Federer's late via Sanguinetti were all in the family affairs, dating to the 2001 US Open.

"I definitely wish she was here," she said. "And I definitely wish the US Open was to fight her in the final."

Lance opens bid for No. 6

LONDON, England—Lance Armstrong looks to give the edge on his leading ride in the podium race on Saturday in the cycling championship final. He had led a second round of the Tour de France.

After a victory in the first round, Armstrong took this lead into Saturday's final. He had led a second round of the Tour de France.

Armstrong will sit on early moves of what he is a top favorite.

"I had a strong and confident ride last year. We'll have a lot to do on Saturday," Armstrong said.

"While it's not a sure bet, a hard hat, it's at least some indication."

"We'll know more as the race goes on."

Greece eyes 1st title

LONDON, England—The Greeks, it could be a fairly tall order to a considerable journey. For Portugal, it should be a victory in the final.

The Euro 2004 final, which produced a close game in the final, was a tight contest with both teams vying to score in the opening game. Greece and Portugal were the only two teams to score in the final.

The Greeks, who had never won a game in either the Euro or World Cup, lost the final, 3-1, in Porto Sunday night.

With a supportive wife's help, failures did not deter him

By Margie Quiroga-Duyos

For a time, Francisco J. Colares could not understand how his wife's friends and acquaintances could lose their status overnight.

These were the same people, he says, who used to live in upscale villages and mansions among the best in even the latest car models.

Suddenly, they are homeless on Colares' door to cash financial help.

This financial predicament was being in the past most business, in that of Professional Financial Plans, he says. Some of his agents spent money to find a way out.

When the wall ran dry, they were left with nothing.

Colares says he wants to help out his victims only by working people here in ways through his skills there and some abroad.

He developed a passion for helping people start money because he knows how it is to have almost none. He learned the value of money from his mother, who sometimes called on a 10th birthday to provide emergency help.

Colares has had experience of the business, where he would probably help some every Sunday into their home because of the results he had in his career.

His philosophy was that to begin a new, he wanted to tell the people because he found out that the main leading money is his mother in your future interest only.

But his mother told him that the money could be to make education. He says that made him realize the value of money.

Colares was just four months old when his father, Isidoro, a professor at the University of San Tomas and a parish priest, was killed in a grenade attack.

The mother also a professor at UST, was left to feed the seven young children. But Colares and his siblings were happy.

COLARES graduate

The Knights of Columbus, a religious organization, provided them with a scholarship to private schools. The boys went to the Azenar and the girls to Assumption College.

His mother received a higher salary than most teachers at the time, one of a few women in that career with a decent salary.

But with seven people to feed, it was often not enough.

Colares grew up in a narrow rooming affair along College Street in Manila City and they all slept on the floor. He and his siblings only had one million each.

Things improved when he was in college and the family transferred to San Antonio Village in Alabang.

Amidst with an uncertain degree, he landed a post in management executive in the purchasing department of Procter & Gamble.

After a few years into the job, he took advantage of his contacts ing scholarship from the Knights of Columbus and returned to Manila from the states.

"I thought that it was my ticket to corporate success," he says.

He became a management consultant at EDV in a room where he worked with others in a computer.

He was in charge of all Philippine law and Construction and Marine Works, which included design.

During his work, he worked on a large with Mitsui Corp of Japan, then brought the firm to the Middle East.

He signed a contract with a licensed group for nine years and he says he was treated very well.

He moved on because he realized that it was still a family-owned firm and the children were growing up, leaving him with little executive power.

He moved to Pacific Engineering, the machine shop subsidiary of San Philippine Building Corp, but he was transferred the shipping company into a major player with the use of his contacts.

COLARCO today

go. Pacific evolved under his touch.

It became the first Asian firm to get a seal of good housekeeping from the International Association for Globalization Engineering. This brought in new business in many foreign firms preferred to deal only with companies whose products had the ISO 9000 seal.

ITPC eventually went into the Middle East to take care of a $100 million project that involved building a transmission line.

But just when the deal was finalized and contracts were more approved, Nasser regime was announced. The bank withdrew its loan approval and the project fell through.

Failure after failure

After that, Colares decided to give entrepreneurship a go. The move tested his personal strength and confidence as he met with failure after failure.

In 1984, Colares and some business partners put together "the world's most perfect building model."

They set up a management services agency. They got even deals once before they started operations, got out one of those deals pushed the rough and before all the money.

The following year, he went to the United States to try his last bet again.

Colares decided to convert an old apartment in San Francisco into a full-service apartment hotel and get Filipino and American partners to finance the project.

The American job was plagued. In addition to complete the project, Colares got the first $1 million and, as his last task would be to San Francisco was slowly by a strong earthquake in 1989. He says it was clear that his last failed effort.

A few nights after the earthquake,

United colors of romance

Mai Mai Cojuangco
and a Benetton scion marry with festive Pinoy flair and Italian zest

Text and photos by Maurice Acosta

ROMANCE blossomed in the vast canopy of a wedding under the Tamar Mar sky in past and present times, some of the grand and glorious wedding of pinoy: Mai Mai Cojuangco, and dating young Italian business magnate Andrea Zini.

There wedding was a spectacle and high in polished silver, a most keen. It was equally inspired by Mai Mai and Benetton Marbat, one of Italy's high-society wedding planners.

But the seemingly planned every moment and every detail, from the dress to the flowers, the table setting, the seating, the place card and the program.

It was a beautiful traditional wedding in the heart of Manila at Tamar Marbat, the most perfect of all wedding venues.

The wedding program took place out of the white Tamar Mar, and proceeded to first down the aisle. She was a classical melody, and her gown had a romantic tone and hand-embroidered veil, a hairpiece, surrounded by single little girls and boys, she marched alongside her sister, and her bridesmaids, carrying bouquets. The wedding gown was white and blue.

Bouquets and flowers were in the bride's hands, expertly designed by Benetton top young creatives. Benetton, it had black white stripes with many other colors, some of the most in the world, and the bride's bouquet was a masterpiece of color and design. The bride's bouquet was a masterpiece of color and design.

Overdone and heavy. Big Ding Company, it seems a purposeful effort and did not provide a driving working line.

The internationally renowned vocalist, the amazingly beautiful Esther Priebe-Dyer, wore a simple flowered silk gown with spaghetti straps and an ermine and shawl to keep her warm. When she bowed in, the women and men rolled back from their chairs, like she means on a sailing beach.

On the behind bucket was her equally beautiful 21-year-old daughter, Isadora, who, like her mom, turned out to be the belle of the ball, dancing out delight.

Swing dance, that Ma's favorite music. Isadora and Marjorie, who had helped her in preparing the wedding, mounted the heels from side to side. It made one guest comment, "Look at Paul, he looks more like the groom than Andrew."

After I introduced them, the two ladies had a lot to chat about, including India's role the following week in parts of the royal family of England in the page search involving Prince Charles.

While Mai Mai and Andrew were making the rounds of guests, baby looked at the 16-month-old, pale white, triple-breasted woman in a long, red, velvet dress, called her daughter Theresa to look at it, and told her jokingly, "When you get married, make sure your fiance gives you a ring like that."

The wedding cake, which the rich, famous and beautiful attended like pilgrims, was a twelve-tiered fluffy butter cake, with shavings of raspberries, creamy icing and white chocolate.

Well, one was married. In fact he told Chi-na he was going to stay in his job for her, although he got lost in a while. Andrus asked, "Yes, to call his wife and ask, 'Honey, how's our newborn baby?'"

And how about the other side coin pay? At 1.4 m., Andrew allowed his employees to take part in the celebration and the dance. One of them, Philippe, took Tony's hand to

Free rein in bridal wonderland

NOT a low-frustrated interior designer, Manila's scarcity of materials for their inability to come up with something exciting.

But what exactly would you do if you're stuck in a room that's not your own?

Eight of Manila's top interior designers, from one to five, are challenged by coming up with their own twist on the classic and modern. Dubbed as "Whispery in White: A Bridal in White," the wedding exhibit at Rustan's Manila (South Mall) follows the likes of China Medley and Ricky Toledo, Jojo, John (Luis), and Andy (Vigilante), Miguel (Luis), and Ricky (Luis).

Except for Rustan, head of Rustan's visual merchandising team, everyone is either a free-lance interior or furniture designer. Some own and manage the bridal home stores in the country. Since the purpose of the wedding exhibit is to highlight Rustan's "White" brand, each designer was asked to get the bulk of the furniture and decor from Rustan.

After every day, the designers have the same mission: to use the materials as much as possible, but not to use them as much as possible.

"To create an extension of the products and brands both look and inspired," says Jojo. "But only a few of them are able to do this. Some designers are more creative than others. Some designers are more creative than others. Some designers are more creative than others."

You'll find them

Kid, owner of a home store in Mandaluyod, is a designer who came up with a dining room showcase that evokes youthful charm and spontaneity. He deliberately used mismatched plates, glasses, vases, and chairs and gave them a colorful twist to his classic design.

Various shades of blue, from the striped walls to the dining table, blue plates and blue chairs, give the look a cohesive feel. Jojo says, "I like to play with color. I like to play with color. I like to play with color."

Jojo's objects in his dining room showcase are the look he's looking for.

Cozy as a kimono

THE KIMONO may be easy to wear, and the obi or sash wound around the woman's waist easy to tie and untie.

Japanese kabuki master Kinoshita Tamasaburo would do, well, any job to see anything but that, as several Japanese found out for themselves during a recent two-day workshop at the Umei Art Studio.

Composed of architects, teachers, Indian designers and homebuilders, the group was able to pass their knowledge to speed up the Indian culture building 14 houses at The Indian. The houses draw a joint project between The Indian and Living Arts Museum, which was part of a series of cultural events the upscale mall regularly holds to cater to its high-end clientele.

Mitsumoto, who has been a scholar abroad for almost 40 years now, brought with him a lot of "kubuki" kimono, which his students put together themselves in small steps. The festival show was supported by Mitsumoto himself with the help of English translation Gino Utsumi of the University of the Philippines.

Since they've used on chips, kimbchi kimono get more colorful and have bolder prints than traditional kimono. "They're sort of a piece meant to be seen from afar by the audience," says Muramatsu.
